URORALEIGH.

The London Atheneum says:

Our best living English Poetess—our greatest English poetess of any time—has essayed in Aurora Leigh to blend the epic with the didactic novel. The medium in which the story floats is that impassioned language—spotted and flowered with the imagery suggested by fancy or stored up by learning, which has given the verse of Mrs. Browning a more fiery acceptance from the young and spiritual, and her name a higher remown than any woman, has beretofore gained.

Page on page of extracts would not suffice to contain the high thoughts the deep feelings, the funtatic images abovered over the tale with the authority of a prophetess, the grace of a muse, the prodigailty of a queea. Such a poem, we dure aver, has never before been written by a woman. Our admiration of its writer's genius, and our syngathy with the nobility of her purpose are keen and without measure.

From The Daily Times.

"Aurora Leigh is the prominent book of the season, and is wortly of universal acceptation. The exquisitely-toned music in this author, the elevation and pathos, the joy and sorrow of this richly-rifted nature—it is no mean spirit by which they are worthly accepted."

A GOORGEOUS BOOK.

MR. GOODRICH'S GALAXY OF BEAUTY, WIT and HEROISM. THE COURT OF NAPOLEON

THE COURT OF NAPOLEON;

Or, SOCIETY UNDER THE FIRST EMPIRE.

Says The Newark Daily Advertiser:

"This work deserves to be enumerated among the superb bocks of the world. It certainly will rank vary high among the areat works of the Western Continent Audubon's Birds, and possibly Agassia's coming work on Visites (a report is true) may surpass it. As a holiday gift-book, no past work that we have seen equals it. The paper, letter press, binding in exquisite Turkey Antique, are of the finest description. It is a royal octave in size, so as to admit the large lithographs which crimment the work. These are portraits of the leading women of France connected with the Court and the Emperor. The majestic extravagant, complisions Josephine, in her Imperial robes, faces the title-page, where, in inferior miniature, appears her little acrupitons successor, Maria Louisa surrounded by more minute medailions of the three Emperors, Napoleon I., II and III., and the present Empress Eugenie. The letter-press of this page is in guid, and is extremely chaste and beautiful.

cutaide lives, without seeking in the turbid, and perhaps impure, stream of their inner life 'to poir's mosal or adorn a tale. He has skimmed the glittering bubble from the top of the stream, regardless of the mud or the pearls that lay deep in its depths. The literary portion is a series of sketches slightly struct to geth trace collection of pen portraits to match the illustrations, rather than a consecutive maranitys. This has given the author the privilege of selection—of avoiding events of little laterast or repulsive in their character; and of choosing such beautiful personage as Charlotte Cordy and Madams Holand, and embalming their fragrant memories in the luxuriant pages of this unique volume.

balming their fragrant memories in the luxuriant pages of this unique volume.

"The orializality of this work is in its construction. The writer has evidently care and permed the histories of the Freuch Revolution as the by Thiers Lamartine, Michelet and many others; evidently consulted the journals of the day, the pamphiets argurementative, as irieal and rideolous, with which the press tetuned at various specific. The liveliness of the litterateurs of the Freuch school has been freely translated, and the authors seems himself to be fully imbused with its spirit, so that the work reads like the sprightly feutiletons of the daily papers, of Houssaye, and Jaint, and Guizot.

"Our readers may see that this is no common book, but one that will strate by its artistic beauties, and exhibit corresponding enrellence in its ruges, slike interesting and instructive.

"Few gifts will prove of more lasting safiafaction to the fortunate respicant."

MASONS LIBRARY OF STANDARD TALES. HARRIET LEE'S CANTERBURY TALES.

HARRIET LEE'S

CANTERBURY TALES.

2 vols. cloth, 12mo. Price $175

We propose issuing, is uniform style, a series of volumes of those Tales, which have really attained a standard pace in English Literature. The design is to adopt nothing in the series which is untried—nothing which has not endured the test of time, as well as won the ephemeral popularity of a season. Upon this pien, we hope to turnien a series of volumes which will be worthy a place in every library.

The two volumes ready to day contain the celebrated Cantenary Tales, by Harrier Lee, and are deemed worthy to commence a series of the high character intended. After they had been before the English public for a long time. The Speciator said of them:

To reast the Canterbury Tales of Miss Lee once more is a species of tempery regeteration. There is scarcely any educated person of this century who has not, at some time or other, drawn a chorer pleasure from these pages. The different tales have been to many the turning does a leaf in ide.

The Officer's Tale perhaps, was read on some comy bank in a picasant land—a volcen pleasure. On the German's Tale, a rehaps two hearts beat in unison, trembled in harmony; and where, sharing a mutant asyration two heads bent over the may the particular and the standard countergration in the eathedral.

We may be particularly of the turned countergration in the eathedral.

We may be particularly of the turned countergration in the eathedral.

We may be particularly of the turned of far more mitterest than we take up any new novel of the day.

Sain The Edioburgh Post:

"Few readers of entervaining literature can be ignorant of these popular productions, and we are, therefore, spared the accessity of saying how much we have been excited by a permain of "Muniford" how deeply entervalued by the narrative of "Anundei," how truly affected by the stories of Constance and 'Lotakies. The pure morality which relians through these tales—which we can scarcely done to call fictions—will reader them the most eligible reading fo
